ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Whatever merit this dictionary may have is due in large measure to the help so freely given by many kind persons, among them Dr. Oscar Bandeira, Dr. and Mrs. Roberto Barthel-Rosa, Jorge V. Bérard, Mrs. Carmen Chang, Dr. Reinaldo A. Forster, Charles A. Gauld, Dr. Jorge da Costa Lino, A. C. Mosser, Dr. J. O. Nascimento, Dr. Heraldo P. de Oliveira, Dr. Sansão Campos Pereira, Dr. and Mrs. João Baptista Pinheiro, Miss Hedy Schroder, Mrs. Gwendolyn Taylor, my daughter Sally Taylor, Érico Veríssimo, and Dr. M. A. Zeitlin.

In addition to these, I am especially indebted to Armando S. Pires for his editing of countless pages of the draft copy and for much of the proofreading; to Mrs. Leontina Figner and Dr. Maurício Wellisch for much close collaboration during the early stages; to Dr. George Sprague Myers, of Stanford University, for his help with the entries on fishes; to Dr. Robert F. Murphy, of the University of California, for his review of Indian tribal names; to Dr. James S. Holton, of Sacramento State College, for his authorship of the Appendix on verbs and for his review of the section on pronunciation; to the editorial staff of Stanford University Press for their expert guidance; to Nancy Morgan and Ruth Randle, who did much of the typing, and especially to Corrine Mason, who did most of it.

And finally, my deepest gratitude to Dr. Ronald Hilton, Director of Hispanic American Studies at Stanford University, for his years of active help and stimulating interest in the work, and to Agnes, to whom this book is affectionately dedicated, for her cheerful renunciation of wifely claim to thousands of hours of my leisure time while the work was in progress.

INTRODUCTION

The need for a good Portuguese-English dictionary has long been felt, and it is the aim of this work to satisfy that need. Although several English-Portuguese dictionaries are available—notably two excellent ones published in Brazil since 1950[1]—the same cannot be said of Portuguese-English works. In fact, with the lone exception of the now quite old Michaelis (published in 1887) no comprehensive Portuguese-English dictionary has heretofore appeared.

This lacuna having now been filled, it is the compiler's ardent hope that this volume will facilitate the use and enjoyment of the Portuguese language to an ever greater number of English-speaking persons. It will be useful also to Brazilians and Portuguese in writing and speaking English.

In the preparation of this dictionary a number of points had to be decided upon at the outset. The first, of course, was the nature and scope of the work contemplated. In this respect my aim has been to provide an everyday working tool for as large a number of persons as possible, ranging from beginning students of the language to teachers of Portuguese; from travelers, translators, exporters and importers, to technicians, engineers, scientists, professional people, government officials and diplomats—anyone, in fact, who for any reason may wish to "look up" a word in Portuguese.

Among other things, this utilitarian aim has meant providing for most of the entry words not alone their closest equivalents in English but one or more synonyms as well, with further clarification in many cases by examples of usage. In cases where equivalents do not exist in English, definitions have been supplied, sometimes by lifting them verbatim from the Merriam-Webster[2] and the Glossary of Brazilian-Amazonian Terms.[3] See, for example, aval and mata-feijão.

Large numbers of technical words in the arts and sciences have been included, and many colloquialisms, idioms, slang words, and expressions are given along with their counterparts in English. Further, in keeping with the richness of the Brazilian fauna and flora, the vernacular names of many plants and animals are supplied, accompanied not alone by their common names or descriptions in English but by their Latin scientific names as well, which in practically every case were checked against the latest authorities and brought up to date where necessary. In the case of plants, the spelling of the common names in English is that adopted and recommended by the American Joint Committee on Horticultural Nomenclature; thus, jackinthepulpit instead of jack-in-the-pulpit; dutchmanspipe instead of dutchman's-pipe.

It should be pointed out in this connection that Brazilian common names for plants and animals are exceedingly varied, and just as any one species may be known by different names in various parts of the country, each of these in turn may refer to more than one species. It is certain, therefore, that many of the common names appearing in the vocabulary are applicable to one or more species in addition to those listed.

An example, and not an unusual one, of the multiplicity of vernacular names is the equivalents for skunk, taken from three Brazilian sources. In addition to cangambá, which is perhaps the term most widely used, the following nineteen synonyms or variants are offered, of which no fewer than twelve (those in italics) appear in the official orthographic vocabulary: iritacaca, iritataca, jaguané, jaguaré, jaguarecaca, jaguarecagua, jaguaritaca, jaratataca, jaraticaca, jaritacaca, jaritataca, jeraticaca, jeritacaca, jeritataca, maritacaca, maritafede, maritataca, tacaca and zorrilho.

This profusion of variants is not limited to names of plants and animals but exists in relation to many other words. The word alvanel, for instance, meaning stonemason or bricklayer, has eight variants; the verb relampaguear (to flash like lightning) has six variants. Though many variants have been included in the vocabulary, with cross-reference to the main word, it was obviously impossible to include them all, and in fact no attempt was made to do so.

Another basic matter which had to be decided upon at the beginning of the work was the approximate number of words to be listed. The largest Portuguese dictionary in existence[4] is a work of five volumes with 171,046 main entries. At the other end we have the word count sponsored in the early 1940's by the Committee on Modern Languages of the American Council of Education, and, as far as I know, the only word count ever made of Portuguese. Word Book[5] published as the result of this count supplies a list of only 9,345 words having a range and frequency of five or more. Somewhere between these two extremes—9,345 and 171,046—lay the optimum number for my purpose, and I arbitrarily set 60,000 as the ideal number, or about one-third of the main entries in the large dictionary cited above. This number of 60,000, incidentally, is about one-half the number of words listed in the official Pequeno Vocabulário da Língua Portuguêsa published in 1943 by the Brazilian Academy of Letters.

In this dictionary the 9,345 words listed in the Graded Word Book are of course included, as they were certain to be in any case, even without the word count. The remaining fifty thousand had to be selected subjectively, but not altogether without some aid from informants.

ORTHOGRAPHY

The simplified and, for all practical purposes, unified systems of orthography now prevailing in Brazil and Portugal are the happy result of a series of agreements and disagreements extending as far back as 1915.

In 1940 the Lisbon Academy of Sciences published its official and definitive simplified vocabulary, and by agreement and official government endorsement, this was used by the Brazilian Academy of Letters as the basis for the compilation of its own vocabulary published in 1943.

Although the differences between the two vocabularies were minor, an attempt was made in 1945 by a dissident group in Brazil to force a closer approximation to the Portuguese model, particularly in the matter of accentuation, and an arbitrary decree by the then dictator government of Brazil was in fact handed down to this effect. This decree, however, met with strong popular resistance and was never ratified by the Brazilian Congress, though it was not until 1956 that the Congress got around to declaring it of no effect. Thus, the official Brazilian orthography is and has been since 1943 the one issued on August 12 of that year by the Brazilian Academy of Letters, and is the one followed in this work. As previously stated, however, the differences between the orthographies of the two countries are minor.

From the standpoint of simplification, the principal gains achieved by the reformed spelling are: elimination of most silent letters, and of most double letters except rr and ss; the dropping of k, w, and y, and almost entirely of h; the replacement of ph by f, and a wider use of accent marks.

Because of these and other changes, persons not entirely familiar with the new system may sometimes have difficulty in finding in this dictionary words appearing in the older literature. In such cases, the following table will afford clues to possible respellings under which the search may be continued.

ACCENTUATION

1. If a word bears an acute accent (which indicates open vowel quality), or a circumflex accent (which indicates close vowel quality), stress the syllable so marked: a*té*, a*çú*car, am*bí*guo, fran*cês*, *âm*bar.

2. If a word bears a tilde (which indicates nasal vowel quality) stress the syllable so marked, unless the word bears also an acute or circumflex accent: ir*mã*, ma*nhã*, capi*tão*, but a*cór*dão, *bên*ção.

Exceptions to (1) and (2): derivatives in -mente, or words having a suffix beginning with z, are stressed on the next-to-last syllable, regardless of the accent mark which then is retained merely to indicate vowel quality. (In such cases, the grave accent is used in place of the acute.) Examples: terrìvel*men*te [ter*rí*vel], cômoda*men*te [*cô*modo], chã*men*te [chão], opùsculo*zi*nho [o*pús*culo], dendê*zei*ro [den*dê*], irmã*zi*nha [ir*mã*].

3. If there is no written accent:

a) Stress the next-to-last syllable of words ending in a(s), e(s), o(s), am, em, or ens. Note that the final groups ua, uo, ia, and io will ordinarily be stressed on the i or u, forming two syllables (unless, of course, the word bears a written accent on another syllable, as in ambíguo above). Examples: *ca*sa(s), *an*tes, a*pren*de, *co*mem, can*sa*dos, *i*magens, par*ti*a, conti*nu*a, doen*ti*o.

b) Stress the last syllable of all other words: fa*zer*, ca*ir*, si*ri*, ta*tu*, a*qui*, pa*pel*, ja*mais*, i*guais*.

c) Stressed last syllables ending in open a, e, o, bear the acute accent (ca*já*, jaca*ré*, go*gó*), and those ending in close e or o bear the circumflex (sa*ruê*, a*vô*). But stressed last syllables ending in i or u do not take an accent mark: si*ri*, tu*pi*, ta*tu*, ja*cu*. [Many persons find it strange no longer to write si*rí*, tu*pí*, ta*tú*, ja*cú*.]

4. Note that the grave accent (`) indicates open-vowel quality but not stress. In addition to its use on derivatives (as shown above) it is used also to indicate contractions of the preposition a with the article a or with demonstrative adjectives or pronouns: à [a+a, to the], àqueles [a+aquêles, to those], àqueloutras [a+aqueloutras, to those other ones].

5. The dieresis (¨) does not indicate stress but the fact that unstressed u is to be pronounced in the combinations qüe, qüi, güe and güi. When stressed and pronounced in these combinations, u bears the acute accent: ar*gúi*, averi*gúe*, etc.

SYLLABIFICATION

The rules governing the division of words are few and simple:

1. An initial consonant group is not divided but begins the first syllable: mne-mô-ni-ca, pneu-má-ti-co. [Note: such initial consonants are not silent, as in English, but are pronounced.]

2. A medial consonant not followed by a vowel remains with the preceding syllable: ab-di-car, nup-ci-al, des-li-gar.

3. The digraphs ch, lh, and nh are never divided: bi-chi-nho, fi-lhi-nho, nhe-nhe-nhém.

4. An occlusive or stopped consonant (p, b, t, d, hard c and g) plus a liquid consonant (l or r) remain together unless the first consonant belongs to the prefix: a-blu-ção, a-bra-sar, but su*b*-*l*in-gual.

5. The letters s and x remain with the prefix when followed by a consonant: bis-ne-to, ex-tra-ir; but when followed by a vowel they become the first letter of the second syllable: bi-sa-vô, e-xér-ci-to.

6. All double letters are divided: pro*r*-*r*o-gar, a*s*-*s*en-tir.

7. Vowels in hiatus, whether different or alike, are divided: fr*i*-ís-si-mo, d*u*-e-lo.

8. Diphthongs, and the combinations qu and gu, always remain together: a-ni-m*ais*, e-qui-va-ler, am-bí-guo.

Although there is no standard Portuguese, the language of cultured persons in Rio de Janeiro and Coimbra or Lisbon is frequently regarded as such, and since this dictionary relates mainly to Brazilian Portuguese, so will this brief exposition relate mainly to the language of the carioca.

The tables are intended merely to provide a key to the symbols of the International Phonetic Association (IPA) which will be used in transcribing the examples given in the ensuing paragraphs.

THE VOWELS

In Brazil, a has three possible values: [ɑ], [a], and [ɐ̃] (In Portugal, there is a fourth value [ɐ] discussed later.)

The first value is like a in *a*rm, and occurs when followed in the same syllable (which is not very often) by u or l: aumento [ɑu'mẽ.tu], balde ['bɑl.di].

The second value [a] is the most troublesome for English-speaking persons, especially Americans, mainly because they do not recognize the difference between it and [ɑ], which indeed it closely resembles, and also because [a] is less used in English than any other a.

This [a] is never as in *a*rm, *a*le, c*a*re, or *a*dd, but is intermediate between *a*rm and *a*dd, and is often so pronounced in America in *a*unt, *a*sk, gr*a*ss, d*a*nce, st*a*ff, p*a*th, etc., in northern England in b*a*ck, p*a*n; French p*a*tte, m*a*l, g*a*re; Spanish g*a*to, p*a*to.

[a] occurs in both stressed and unstressed syllables. When unstressed its quality approximates that of a in sof*a* or ide*a*. In narrow phonetic transcription its IPA symbol would be [ə], but here we are using the same symbol [a] for both stressed and unstressed [a]: barata [ba'ra.ta], saltar [sɑl'tar], sapataria [sa.pa.ta'ri.a].

The third value—nasal a—is not easy to acquire nor can it be described on paper. It is somewhat like French un [œ̃], but not like enfant [ɑ̃] nor v*in* [ɛ̃], neither of which sounds occurs in Brazil. Nor is it simply [a] nasalized, but a close variety of a [ɐ] heard in Portugal in such words as c*a*da, *a*t*a*car, p*a*ra, but not in Brazil except when nasalized; hence the symbol [ɐ̃]: lã [lɐ̃], ano ['ɐ̃.nu], mama ['mɐ̃.ma].

Stressed e has three values: [ɛ] open, [e] close, and [ẽ] nasal.

Open e [ɛ] is somewhat like e in p*e*ar, but it is better compared with French p*è*re, Italian *e*ra. Many words having [ɛ] are marked with the acute accent (é), but many are not so marked and must be learned one by one. Examples: pé [pɛ], sede ['sɛ.di] (cf. sêde below), papel [pa'pɛl].

Close e [e] approximates the e sound in Scottish d*a*y, French parl*e*r. When marked with the circumflex accent (ê), it is always close, as well as in other cases not so marked and which must be learned individually. Examples: mês [meʃ], mesa ['me.za], sêde ['se.di] (cf. sede above).

(For remarks concerning certain regular shifts in the quality of e in verb conjugations, see the section on verbs in the Appendix.)

When [e] is followed by m, n, or nh, it is nasalized and becomes [ẽ]. Its correct sound cannot be described but roughly may be compared to uttering eng without the g. It does not resemble any of the French nasals. Examples: tempo ['tẽ.pu], mente ['mẽ.ti], venho ['vẽ.ɲu].

In the prefixes em- and en-, when unstressed and followed by a consonant, [ẽ] generally but not always becomes [ĩ]: embora [ĩ'bɔ.ra], encanto [ĩ.'kɐ̃.tu].

Unstressed e generally becomes unstressed [i], as y in lady: vale ['va.li]. It should be pointed out in this connection that many Brazilians, notably the Paulistas, resist this change of unstressed [e] to [i].

I

This letter is never pronounced as i in ice, but if stressed resembles the i in pique, and if unstressed, it is like y in ready. A better illustration is French, Spanish, and Italian si. In the following examples [i] is used in both stressed and unstressed syllables: livro ['li.vru], juruti [ʒu.ru'ti], fitar [fi'tar], médico ['mɛ.di.ku].

Nasal i [ĩ] is formed when [i] precedes m, n, or nh, and is pronounced as stressed oral i but through the nose, somewhat as in s*i*ng with g silent: fim [fĩ], intriga [ĩ'tri.ga], vinho ['vĩ.ɲu].

O

Stressed o has three values: [ɔ] open, [o] close, and [õ] close and nasalized.

Open o [ɔ] is never pronounced as in *o*ld, d*o*g, or anat*o*my, but approximately as in n*o*rth, *o*rb, h*o*t. Italian p*o*ca c*o*sa is a better example, and so is French n*o*rd and Spanish n*o*rte. When o bears the acute (ó) or grave (ò) accent it is always open: cobra ['kɔ.bra], código ['kɔ.di.gu], sòmente [sɔ'mẽ.ti].

Close o [o] approaches English n*o*te, Scottish c*o*at, French t*ô*t, Italian d*o*ve. It is always close when it bears the circumflex accent and often when it does not: côrte ['kor.ti], valioso [va.li'o.zu].

Tonic o in many words changes from [o] in the masculine to [ɔ] in the feminine (if there is one), and in both plurals. The most common and unexceptional examples of this are the adjectives ending in -oso (see table, p. xiii).

[For remarks concerning regular shifts in the quality of o in verb conjugations, see the section on verbs in the Appendix.]

Pretonic [o] followed by a vowel with which it does not form a diphthong, posttonic [o], and unstressed final [o], generally change to [u]: doente [du'ẽ.ti], pérola ['pɛ.ru.la], eterno [e'tɛr.nu]—but, as in other instances, many Brazilians outside of Rio de Janeiro resist this change. The Carioca says ['por.tu] but the Paulista sticks to ['por.to].

Posttonic [o] followed by a vowel changes to [w]: páscoa ['paʃ.kwa], but careful speakers often interpose a hiatus: ['paʃ.ku.a]. In this connection, see remarks under "Deceptive Diphthongs."

Nasal o: when unstressed [o] is followed by m, n, or nh, in the same word, it becomes nasalized, roughly as in French bon, which, however, is [bɔ̃], whereas Portuguese bom is [bõ]. Examples: conde ['kõ.di], nome ['nõ.mi], medonho [me'dõ.ɲu].

Many Brazilians, however, do not nasalize pretonic [o] or any other vowel in an open syllable followed by m or n+vowel: tomate [tõ'ma.ti] or [to'ma.ti], nacional [na.si.õ'nal] or [na.si.o'nal].

	Masc. sing.	Masc. plural	Fem. sing.	Fem. plural
valioso	[va.li'o.zu]	[va.li'ɔ.zuʃ]	[va.li'ɔ.za]	[va.li'ɔ.zaʃ]

Some other everyday words in which this shift occurs:

corpo	['kor.pu]	['kɔr.puʃ]
esforço	[iʃ'for.su]	[iʃ'fɔr.suʃ]
fogo	['fo.gu]	['fɔ.guʃ]
grosso	['gro.su]	['grɔ.suʃ]	['grɔ.sa]	['grɔ.saʃ]

povo	['po.vu]	['pɔ.vuʃ]
torto	['tor.tu]	['tɔr.tuʃ]	['tɔr.ta]	['tɔr.taʃ]

U

U has two values: oral [u] and nasal [ũ].

Oral [u], both stressed and unstressed, is usually like ou in French t*ou*t, never like u in c*u*be, *u*rn, or *u*p: cura ['ku.ra], puxar [pu'ʃar]. Sometimes, and optionally, when followed by a vowel, [u] becomes [w]: mútua ['mu.twa] or ['mu.tu.a].

U is silent in the combinations gue, gui, que, and qui, but must be pronounced when it bears a dieresis: guerra ['ge.rra], quilo ['ki.lu], but eloqüente [e.lo'kwẽ.ti].

Stressed u becomes [ũ] when followed by m, n, or nh: cumba ['kũ.ba], dunga ['dũ.ga], punho ['pũ.ɲu].

Unstressed u in an open vowel followed by m or n may be nasalized or not: tŭmor [tũ'mor] or [tu'mor].

THE DIPHTHONGS

Oral diphthongs

In Portuguese there are eleven strong or falling diphthongs, consisting of any one of the vowels plus a weaker i or u, which in phonetic transcription will be marked thus: ĭ, ŭ. They are:

ai [aĭ]—rhymes with pie: pai [paĭ]
éi [ɛĭ]—open e: papéis [pa'pɛĭʃ]
ei [eĭ]—rhymes with day: lei [leĭ]
ói [ɔĭ]—rhymes with boy: dodói [do.dɔĭ]
oi [oĭ]—close o, rhymes with bo-ee, not boy: boi [boĭ]
ui [uĭ]—rhymes with oo-ee, without hiatus: fui [fuĭ]

> Note: when any of the foregoing diphthongs is followed by a vowel, there is interposed a slight [j]-glide; that is, the sound of y as in *y*et is formed by the speech organs in "gliding" from the diphthong to the vowel: saia ['saĭ.ja], feio ['feĭ.ju].

au [ɑŭ]—formerly written ao—rhymes with cow: mau [mɑŭ]

> Note: not all combinations of a+u are diphthongs—see remarks under "Deceptive Diphthongs."

éu [ɛŭ]—open e—rhymes more or less with eh-oo, without hiatus: chapéu [ʃa'pɛu]
eu [eŭ]—close e—does not rhyme with few but with Spanish feudo: comeu [kõ'meŭ] ou [oŭ]—rhymes with owe, but many speakers rhyme it with the close o [o]: louco ['loŭ.ku] or ['lo.ku] iu [iŭ]—rhymes, very roughly, with ee-oo, without hiatus: subiu [su'biŭ]

Nasal diphthongs

Though few in number, the nasal diphthongs constitute the most difficult hurdle in pronunciation for English-speaking persons. They bear little resemblance to the sounds of any other common language and cannot be adequately described on paper.

ão [ẽu]—roughly like oun in ounce, nasalized, leaving the n unarticulated. It occurs in a great many words: são, não, sabichão, etc. [When used as an augmentative, as in this last word, it changes to -ona in the feminine form: sabichona.]
am [ẽu]—this is the unstressed form of ão, and occurs only when final in such words as falam, tocam, etc. [The m is silent.]
ãe [ẽi]—suggestive of uh-eeng, with g silent and no hiatus: mãe [mẽi], cães [kẽis].
em [ẽi]—roughly, rhymes with ay-ing (without hiatus and with g silent). Occurs only when final in such words as bem, também, viagem, etc. The plural form is -ens.
õe [õi]—roughly like oh-eeng, without hiatus and with g silent: põe [põi], lições [li'sõiʃ].

Semi-diphthongs

At the end of many words there occur certain two-vowel combinations, of which the first vowel is the weaker, which are sometimes referred to as semi- or rising diphthongs.

Although these endings may correctly be uttered as diphthongs, it is considered more elegant to make a hiatus. As a matter of fact, words like gloria, mágoa, régua, etc. are classed as three-syllable words and are accented as such. The following are examples of the ten recognized semi-diphthongs:

ea, as in áurea ['ɑu.rja] or ['ɑu.ri.a] eo, as in níveo ['ni.vju] or ['ni.vi.u]
ia, as in Itália [i'ta.lja] or [i'ta.li.a] ie, as in espécie [iʃ'pɛ.sji] or [iʃ'pɛ.si.i] io, as in canário [kẽ'na.rju] or [kẽ'na.ri.u] or [kẽ'na.ri.o] oa, as in páscoa ['paʃ.kwa] or ['paʃ.ku.a] or ['pas.co.a] ua, as in régua ['rrɛ.gwa] or ['rrɛ.gu.a] ue, as in tênue ['tẽ.nwi] or ['te.nu.i] ui, as in sangüíneo [sẽ'gwi.nju] or [sẽ.gu'i.ni.u] or [sẽ.gu'i.nju]
uo, as in fátuo ['fa.twu] or ['fa.tu.u] or ['fa.tu.o]

Deceptive diphthongs

These are not diphthongs at all but have only the appearance of being so; at best they might be called equal-stress diphthongs. They occur in many Portuguese words, and careful speakers pronounce them with a distinct hiatus. When one of the vowels bears an accent mark, as many of them do, a hiatus is always called for: aéreo [a'ɛ.rju], saúde [sa'u.di]. More often, however, no accent mark is provided, as in the following examples, all of which require hiatus:

ae—baeta [ba'e.ta]
ao—aorta [a'ɔr.ta]
au—paul [pa'ul] [but Paulo is ['pɑŭ.lu]
ea—ideal [i.di'al]
ean—meandro [me'ẽ.dru]
ee—reeleger [rre.e.le.'ʒer]
eo—teologia [te.o.lo'ʒi.a] ia—periferia [pe.ri.fe'ri.a] ian—persiana [per.si'ẽ.na]
ie—piedade [pi.e'da.di]
ien—odiento [o.di'ẽ.tu]
io—doentio [du.ẽ'ti.u]
iu—miudezas [mi.u'de.zaʃ]
oa—lagoa [la'go.a] oan—coando [ko'ẽ.du]
oe—joelho [ʒu'e.ʎu]
oen—doente [du'ẽ.ti]
oo—coordenar [ko.ɔr.de'nar]
ua—falua [fa'lu.a] uan—aguando [a.gu'ẽ.du] uo—averiguo [a.ve.ri'gu.o]
uim—ruim [rru'ĩ]

THE CONSONANTS

B

IPA symbol [b], as in English bub, not as in Spanish saber [sa'ßer].

C

Always hard [k] before, a, o, u, or another consonant, except when marked with a cedilla (ç). It is uttered as in English, but is more staccato.

Before e and i, and when marked with a cedilla (ç), it is soft, as in cease. IPA symbol [s].

Whenever the [k] sound occurs before e or i, it is written qu. See comments under letter Q.

Before a, o, u, or consonant

hard	soft
caco ['ka.ku]	caça ['ka.sa]
côco ['ko.ku]	coço ['kɔ.su]
cutucar [ku.tu'kar]	açúcar [a'su.kar]
crítica ['kri.ti.ca]

Before e and i: soft cêrca ['ser.ka]
ciência [si'ẽ.sja]
criancice [kr.ẽ'si.si]

When c occurs before h, it is a digraph and is pronounced as sh in shush, shoe, shave—IPA symbol [ʃ]. It is never pronounced as [k] in chemistry, but before 1931 it did have that value in such words as chimica, machina, character, modernly spelled química, máquina, caráter.

In a few words of optional spelling (seção or secção, aspeto or aspecto) both the cç (ks) and the ct (kt) must be pronounced if so written. The general practice in Brazil is to omit the c.

D

IPA symbol [d]. With slight differences, the pronunciation is the same as in English. Speakers of Spanish should avoid rendering d fricative between vowels: cidade is [si'da.di] not [si'ða.ðe] as in Spanish cada ['ka.ða].

F

As in English fife—IPA [f].

G

Before a, o, u, or any consonant—hard as in gag. IPA [g]: gago ['ga.gu], glosa ['glɔ.za].

Before e or i, the sound of g is like s in vision. IPA [ʒ]: gelo ['ʒe.lu]

When followed by a or o, gu is pronounced [gw], but as [g] when followed by e or i: água ['a.gwa], guerra ['ge.rra].

When the u of gu bears a dieresis (gü), as it does in a few instances, a hiatus is required before the next vowel: sangüento [sẽ.gu'en.tu].

H

The letter h is nearly always initial and, except in the digraphs ch, lh, and nh, has no phonetic value. It was retained in the official system of simplified spelling purely for etymological and traditional, not to say sentimental, reasons. It goes against the grain to write Baía instead of Bahia.

J

Always as s in vision [ʒ] or like French j, but never as j in judge; nor is it pronounced as in Spanish [IPA x]. Examples: já [ʒa], jeito [ʒeĭ.tu], junta ['ʒũ.ta].

K

This letter is not a part of the Portuguese alphabet, but is retained in international symbols (kg, kl, km, kw, etc.) and in proper names: Kubitscheck.

As in English, there is a "clear" l and a "dark" l, but there is not enough distinction between them to justify making it here; hence, in all examples only the IPA symbol [l] will be used.

lh is a digraph used in many Portuguese words. It is something like English li in filial, but exactly like gl in Italian egli, and Castillian Spanish ll in allá. IPA symbol [ʎ]: filho ['fi.ʎu], toalha [to'a.ʎa], fôlha ['fo.ʎa].

M

In addition to its normal value [m] as in English, m has a nasalizing function but is not itself pronounced; that is, when final, or medial before a consonant, the preceding vowel is nasalized but the m nearly or totally disappears: tocam ['tɔ.kẽũ], bom [bõ], amplo ['ẽ.plu].

N

When followed by a vowel, n is [n] as in English, but when followed by a consonant it is silent, merely serving to nasalize the preceding vowel: nada ['na.da], tanto ['tẽ.tu], findo ['fĩ.du].

nh is a digraph—IPA [ɲ]—and corresponds roughly to ni in onion, but is the same as French gn (oignon), Italian gn (ogni), and Spanish ñ (niño). It always nasalizes the preceding vowel: vinho ['vĩ.ɲu], tinha ['tĩ.ɲa].

P

P is the same as in English—[p].

Q

As in English, q occurs only in combination with u (qu) and when followed by a or o is pronounced kwa [kwa] or kwo [kwo]: quatro ['kwa.tru], quanto ['kwẽ.tu].

When followed by e or i, the pronunciation of qu is [k], except when the u bears a dieresis (qü), which makes it [kw] also: queda ['ke.da], quindim [kĩ'dĩ], freqüente [fre'kwẽ.ti], tranqüilo [trẽ'kwi.lu].

R

Single intervocalic r [r] is not pronounced at all as in English rear, roar, rat, etc., but as in Scottish very, Spanish pe*r*o, Italian ve*r*o: caro ['ka.ru].

Double r [rr], or initial r, on the other hand, is strongly trilled as in Spanish carro, but more often as Parisian uvular r in carreau. In fact, it often sounds like a strongly aspirated h as in hate, or as German ch in Bach: porre ['pɔ.rri].

Single r is pronounced in the same strong manner when initial, or after l or n: rua ['rru.wa], chalrar [ʃɑl'rrar] honra ['õ.rra].

Final r is generally weak and tends to drop off entirely. It should, however, be pronounced with a single flip of the tongue.

S

This letter has four values: two unvoiced, s [s] as in sin, and sh [ʃ] as in shoe, and two voiced: z [z] as in zero, and s as in vision [ʒ]. Double s, and sc followed by e or i, are always [s].

1. s is generally [s]:
   a) when initial: safado [sa'fa.du];
   b) after consonants: falso ['fɑl.su]; but in the prefix trans- it is [z] when followed by a vowel: trânsito ['trẽ.zi.tu];
   c) when final and followed by a word beginning with s: os sêlos [us'se.luʃ].
2. s is generally [ʃ]:
   a) before p, k, t and f: esposo [iʃ'po.zu];
   b) when followed immediately by a word beginning with any of these letters: os pelegos [uʃ.pe'le.guʃ];
   c) when final before a period or other pause in a sentence.
3. s is generally [z]:
   a) when intervocalic: ca.sa ['ka.za];
   b) when final if followed immediately by another word beginning with a vowel or with z: belos olhos [be.lu'zɔ.ʎuʃ], os zorros [uz'zo.rruʃ].
4. s is generally [ʒ]:
   a) before b, g, d, v, l, r, m, n: desmentir [diʒ.mĩ'tir];
   b) when final if followed immediately by a word beginning with any of these letters: Minas Gerais ['mĩ.naʒ.ʒe'raiʃ].

Most Brazilians outside of Rio de Janeiro resist these [ʃ] and [ʒ] varieties of s sounds, and retain [s] and [z] in all cases.

T

The same as in English—symbol [t].

V

The same as in English vivid—symbol [v].

W and Y

These letters are not part of the Portuguese alphabet, but are retained for internationally recognized symbols and for proper names: Werneck, Yolanda, etc.

X

This letter is officially stated to have five different values, but there are no set rules by which they can be learned.

The most common value of x is sh [ʃ]. It occurs both initially and medially in a great many words: xarope [ʃa'rɔ.pi], xilindró [ʃi.lĩ'drɔ], xixixi [ʃi.ʃi'ʃi], deixa ['dei.ʃa], desenxabido [diz.ẽ.ʃa'bi.du].

The second value of x is ks [ks] and it occurs usually within and at the end of words: sexual [sek.su'al], taxi ['tak.si].

A third value is [z] in the prefix ex- followed by a vowel: exemplo [e'zẽ.plu].

Fourth is the sound of double s as in hiss, occurring in such words as aproximar, auxiliar, máxime, proximidade, sintaxe, etc.

Fifth is simple [s]: pretexto [pre'tes.tu], sexto ['ses.tu].

Z

Z is pronounced as in English [z]. If a Brazilian palatalizes final s he will also palatalize final z.

CONTINENTAL VS. BRAZILIAN PORTUGUESE

The differences between the pronunciation of Portuguese on opposite sides of the ocean occur chiefly in the vowels, and are due in part to the existence of two vowel sounds unknown in Brazil.

1. The first of these is [ɐ]. It is a relaxed close a which has been described as resembling the vowel sound of bird of South England. In Portugal it occurs generally where in Brazil it is [a], but when nasalized [ɐ̃] it is the same in both countries:

	Portugal	Brazil
atacar	[ɐ.tɐ'kar]	[a.ta'kar]
palavra	[pɐ'la.vrɐ]	[pa'la.vra]
dançar	[dɐ̃'sar]	[dɐ̃'sar]

2. The second vowel sound not used in Brazil is [ə]. This approximates French mute e, and corresponds generally to Brazilian pretonic [e]:

	Portugal	Brazil
levar	[lə'var]	[le'var]
beber	[bə'ber]	[be'ber]

3. In Portugal, however, pretonic e is frequently dropped altogether in words such as querer and menino, which are pronounced as if written qu'rer and m'nino.

4. In Portugal, but not in Brazil, unstressed final e and o are usually dropped, and such words as noute, gente, cidade, levo, fixo, peixe, leite are pronounced as if written nout', gent', cidad', lev', fix', peix', and leit'.

5. Pretonic e and o are kept open in many cases where in Brazil they are close:

	Portugal	Brazil
espetáculo	[iʃ.pɛ'ta.ku.lu]	[iʃ.pe'ta.ku.lu]
mezinha	[mɛ'zɪ.ɲɐ]	[me'zɪ.ɲa]
freguês	[frɛ'geʃ]	[fre'geʃ]
corar	[kɔ'rar]	[ko'rar]

6. In Portugal, but not in Brazil, a distinction is made both in writing and in pronunciation between the verbal ending -amos of the present and preterite tenses:

	Portugal	Brazil
Present Ind.	falamos [fɐ'lẽ.muʃ]	falamos [fa'lẽ.muʃ]
Preterite	falámos [fɐ'la.muʃ]	falamos [fa'lẽ.muʃ]

7. e and o preceding m, n, and nh followed by a vowel are not nasalized and therefore remain open, whereas in Brazil just the opposite occurs:

	Portugal	Brazil
fome	['fɔ.m]	['fõ.mi]
comodo	['kɔ.mu.du]	['kõ.mu.du]
(written)	cómodo	cômodo
genio	['ʒɛ.nju]	['ʒẽ.nju]
(written)	génio	gênio

8. a preceding m, n, and nh followed by a vowel is not nasalized but remains close, whereas in Brazil it is both close and nasalized:

	Portugal	Brazil
banho	['bɐ.ɲu]	['bɐ̃.ɲu]
lama	['lɐ.mɐ]	['lɐ̃.ma]
cama	['kɐ.mɐ]	['kɐ̃.ma]

9. Final s and z are noticeably more strongly palatalized than Brazilian [ʃ] and [ʒ], which in most of Brazil are not palatalized at all.

10. Many words of optional spelling with the diphthongs ou or oi, such as couro, coiro, ouro, oiro, louro, loiro, are differently preferred in the two countries. Of the examples given, the words with ou are preferred in Brazil and the ones with oi in Portugal. On the other hand, the reverse is true in many other cases, such as doudo and cousa, which in Brazil are generally doido and coisa. The point is that when ou is preferred in one country, oi is preferred in the other, and vice-versa.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. Parts-of-speech labels, accompanied in many cases by subject and usage labels, are supplied in parentheses for all entry words:

situar (v.t.)
sucinato (m., Chem.)
lero-lero (m., slang)

2. Although subject labels are not used when the limitation is obvious, they may on the other hand include more than one subject:

hilo (m., Bot., Anat., Zool.)

3. Irregular plural endings are shown in brackets immediately after the entry word:

papel [–péis] (m.)

4. A number referring to the model conjugations in the Appendix is supplied for each irregular verb:

fazer [47] (v.t.)
ir [53] (v.i.)
pôr [63] (v.t.)
ser [76] (v.i.)

5. Irregular forms of the more common verbs are listed as separate entries, with cross reference to the infinitive and to the verb model in the Appendix:

fomos, form of SER [76] and of IR [53]

6. A clue to correct pronunciation, especially of the tonic vowel, is supplied in brackets for words concerning which there may be doubt. [The indication is by means of ordinary letters and accent marks, as if the word were so written, and not by phonetic symbols.]

letra [ê] (f.)
pegada [gá] (f.)

7. The pronunciation of the letter x is shown in brackets when it is ks:

ataxia [ks] (f.)

8. Vowels in hiatus are shown in brackets:

baiano –na [a–i] (adj.; m.,f.)
bainha [a–í] (f.)
saudade [a–u] (f.)

9. Alphabetically-close variants or synonyms are entered on the same line, either in full or (to save space) in abbreviated form:

cominativo –va, cominatório –ria (adj.)
literataço, –teiro, –telho, –tiço, –tiqueiro (m.)

10. In a few instances, where there is a difference of but one letter between two alphabetically-close words of identical meaning and validity, the variant letter is written between brackets:

descarril[h]ar

11. Variants which are not close alphabetically are entered separately and cross-referenced:

sector (m.) = SETOR
setor (m., Mil., Geom., Astron.) sector. Var. SECTOR

12. When two or more words are entered on the same line all forms to the left of a part-of-speech label are grammatically the same:

helícidas, helicídeos (m.pl.)
abalroação, –ada, –adela (f.), –amento (m.)

13. When words entered on the same line are not of equal validity, the more usual or preferred one is entered first even though alphabetically it is second:

alojamento (m.), alojação (f.)

14. Words of the same spelling are combined in a single entry, regardless of variation in part of speech, subject, usage, meaning or etymology:

gôta (f.) drop; tear; dewdrop; (colloq.) epilepsy; (Med.) gout; (Arch.) gutta.

15. Adverbs formed by the simple addition of –mente to feminine adjectives are not listed except in a few instances where it seemed desirable to include them; e.g., absolutamente.

16. The feminine form of adjectives is shown if it is different from the masculine form, which is always placed first:

gordo –da
vão, vã

17. The feminine form is shown of many nouns which ordinarily are thought of as masculine only, and as in the case of adjectives, the masculine form is placed first:

deputado –da
doutor –tora

18. When the masculine and feminine forms of nouns and adjectives are well-established, or when there is a wide difference in their spelling, they are entered separately:

meu (adj.; poss. pron. masc.)
minha, fem. of MEU.
ator (m.)
atriz (f.)
juiz [u–i] (m.)
juíza (f.)

19. Most compound words in Portuguese, whether hyphenated or not, begin with a noun, and in this dictionary will be found in one article grouped alphabetically under the noun. See, for instance, the groupings under bôca, cipó, pau, pé. Such compound words are themselves nouns and have all the same gender as the noun.

Compound words in which the first element is not a noun are all hyphenated and, unlike compound nouns, will vary from one another both in gender and part of speech. They have therefore been entered separately in regular alphabetical order. See, for instance, the entries immediately following bem.

As regards hyphenation, the general rule is that hyphens are to be used when not to do so would create a doubt or convey a wrong meaning, but authors and reference books are anything but consistent on this point.

20. Proper names and nouns are included in alphabetical order. In Portuguese orthography, proper names are always capitalized but their derivatives are not:

Itália, italiano -na
Brasil, brasileiro -ra
América, americano -na

21. All cities, states, regions, rivers, etc., whose names appear in the vocabulary or in the definitions, are situated in Brazil, unless indicated or obviously otherwise.

22. Abbreviations are included in the vocabulary in regular alphabetical order.

23. Synonyms in Portuguese are supplied in brackets, in many cases, either at the end of or within the body of an article. In the latter case, the synonym applies only to that portion of the article lying within semicolons:

açotéia (f.) roof terrace [=SOTÉIA].
abatis [-tises] (m., Fort.) abatis; stew made of chicken necks, wings, feet and giblets [=CABIDELA]; felling of trees [=DERRUBADA].

24. Locutions, idioms, and examples of usage, are listed within articles in alphabetical order. See dar, for example.

eléctrio (m.) electron. Var. ELÉCTRON.
electro (m., Metal.) electrum.
electroanálise (f., Chem.) electroanalysis.
electrocapilaridade (f., Physics) electrocapillarity.
electrocardiógrafo (m.) electrocardiograph.
electrocardiograma (m.) electrocardiogram.
electrocatálise (f.) electrocatalysis.
electrocatalítico -ca (adj.) electrocatalytic.
electrocautério (m.) electrocautery, electrocauterization.
electrocinética (f.) electrokinetics.
electrocronógrafo (m.) electrochronograph.
electrodeposição (f.) electrodeposition.
electrodiálise (f., Phys. Chem.) electrodialysis.
electrodinâminco -ca (adj.) electrodynamic; (f.) electrodynamics.
electrodinamômetro (m., Electrometry) electrodynamometer.
electródio, eléctrodo (m.) electrode.—negativo, cathode. —positivo, anode.
electroduto (m.) electrical conduit.
electroencefalógrafo (m., Med.) electroencephalograph.
electroextração (f.) electroextraction.
electrofisiologia (f., Physiol.) electrophysiology.
electrofone (m., Physics) electrophone.
electroforese (f., Phys. Chem.) electrophoresis, cataphoresis.
electróforo (m., Physics) electrophorus.
electrofotômetro (m.) electrophotometer.
electrogalvânico -ca (adj.) electrogalvanic.
electrogalvanização (f.) electroplating with zinc.
electrogalvanizar (v.t.) to electroplate with zinc.
electrogêneo -nea (adj.) electrogenetic.
electrografia (f.) electrography.
electrógrafo (m.) electrograph.
electrogravar (v.t.) to electroengrave.
electrogravura (f.) an electroengraving.
electroidráulico -ca (adj.) electrohydraulic.
electroímã (m.) electromagnet.
electrolítico -ca (adj.) electrolytic.
electrólito (m.) electrolite.
electroluminescência (f.) electroluminescence.
electromagnético -ca (adj.) electromagnetic.
electromagnetismo (m.) electromagnetism.
electromecânico -ca (adj.) electromechanical; (f., Physics, Elec.) electromechanics.
electrometalizar (v.t.) to electroplate.
electrometalurgia (f.) electrometallurgy.
electrometria (f.) electrometry.
electrômetro (m.) electrometer.
eléctron (m., Physics) electron. Vars. ELÉCTRIO, ELECTRÔNIO.
electrônico -ca (adj.) electronic; (f.) electronics.
electrônio (m.) = ELÉCTRON.
eléctron-volt (m., Physics) electron volt.
electro-óptica (f., Physics) electrooptics.
electro-osmose (f., Phys. Chem.) electroosmosis.
electropirômetro (m.) electropyrometer.
electropneumático -ca (adj.) electropneumatic.
electroprateação (f.) electroplating with silver.
electroquímico -ca (adj.) electrochemical; (f.) electrochemistry.
electrorrefinação (f.) electrolytic refining (of metal).
electroscópico -ca (adj., Physics) electroscopic.
electroscópio (m., Physics) electroscope.—de fôlhas de ouro, gold-leaf electroscope.
electrossiderurgia (f.) electrical smelting and refining of iron.
electrossíntese (f., Chem.) electrosynthesis.
electrossoldadura (f.) electrical welding.
electrostático -ca (adj.) electrostatic; (f.) electrostatics.
electrostenólise (f., Chem.) electrostenolysis.
electrostrição (f.) electrostriction.
electrotecnia (f.) electrotechnics.
electrotécnico -ca (adj.) electrotechnic(al).
electrotecnologia (f.) electrotechnology.
electrotelegrafia (f.) electrotelegraphy.
electrotelurógrafo (m., Elec.) electrotellurograph.
electroterapeuta (m.,f.) electrotherapist.
electroterapia (f.) electrotherapy, electrotherapeutics.
electrotermia (f.) electrothermics.
electrotérmico -ca (adj.) electrothermal.
electrotipia (f.) electrotypy.
electrótipo (m.) electrotype.
electrotônus (m., Physiol.) electrotonus.
electrotropismo (m., Biol.) electrotropism.
elefante (m.), -ta (f.) elephant.—do mar, elephant seal. —marinho, walrus (Odobenus rosmarus).
